Excellence Cannot be Built On a Weak Base: Council of Ontario Universities

Adapted from Briefing Notes of the Ontario Council of Universities

In November 1985, the Treasurer of Ontario announced increases of 4% per year in university operating grants in each of 1986/87 and 1987/88, together with the creation of a post-secondary excellence fund for 1986/87, $50 million of which was to be directed towards university operations. In year over year cash terms, the Government's provision for higher education was increased by 8% in 1986/87. Total university operating revenue, however, was projected to increase by only 6.9%.

This article is meant to provide a brief explanation of why the universities require annual increases to base operating funding above the level of inflation if they are to maintain existing services.

Two principal components affect the present requirements of the universities for increases in the level of their base funding. One is the need to repair the damage done over a protracted period during which this base funding has been inadequate. The other is the need for year over year increases in operating support sufficient to enable the universities to maintain a level state of operations. Recurrent and persistent failure by the previous government to provide for the latter has massively given rise to the former.

Three needs must be addressed in this instance. They are: structural factors, external factors, and new or expanded activities.

Structural factors

Among the structural factors, the first and largest component of the year over year requirements for increases in university financial support is inflation. During the period 1977/78 through 1984/85 university operating grants increased by 68% — the CPI (inflation rate) over the same period increased by 78%. Of particular significance among non-salary price increases are increases in prices for library books (93%) and periodicals (179%), and for scientific equipment (99%).

The pressures of inflation are also reflected in salary costs. Over the period analyzed here, scale increases for university academic staff salaries have amounted to 56%, only 72% of the CPI increase.

The second major structural element in the determination

With severe cutbacks in educational funding, universities must find ways of generating additional revenue, or cut back on equipment costs. (See related story, page 3) of university year over year financial requirements is the need to provide for the net costs of career progress for academic staff. Universities conform to conventional salary policy, with salary ranges by rank and "career progress" salary increments through each rank from the assistant professor to the full professor level.

The third major structural element in university cost increases is capital depreciation. In university operating budgets, the principal impact of capital depreciation relates to the need to replenish stocks of teaching equipment, estimated to have a current value of over $1 billion. Various studies indicate an average life cycle of 12 years for university equipment. That suggest an annual expenditure for equipment replacement of $89 million. Actual expenditure in 1984/85 was $53 million.

Inadequate capital funding for the depreciation of university physical plant also has an impact on university operating budgets. The annual provisions of the previous government of only slightly more than $10 million per year for building renewal have meant a serious strain on university maintenance budgets.

As well, a significant backlog of deferred maintenance has accumulated which must soon be addressed. The longer the delay in addressing this issue, the greater the problems will be and the larger the cost of correcting them.

External factors

The second set of factors bearing upon the year over year financial requirements of universities is categorized, somewhat loosely, as external. In large part, these requirements arise from legislative action which has an

Campus Alcohol Policies & Education

Setting the record straight

by Paddy Blenkinsop
 Coordinator of Student Services

Most of you are probably aware by now of the name CAPE and if you are a Frosh you would have received an introductory brochure on CAPE entitled "Appropriativity".

I have recently been getting adverse comments about CAPE, some of them based on misconceptions, but some reflecting serious concerns amongst students about the aims and tone of the programme.

My reason for writing this article is to provide background and to clear up some of the misunderstanding. Real issues will remain and these will be discussed, I hope and expect, over the course of the next few months.

What is CAPE?

CAPE is a programme designed by the Addiction

Research Foundation (ARF) for university campuses. The purpose of the programme is stated thus:

"Its purpose is to inhibit drinking levels and practices which are associated with alcohol problems. In addition, for those students who drink, CAPE is designed to promote the adoption of drinking styles that are compatible with the related social benefits while minimizing the risk of harmful social and health consequences." (ARF Campus Alcohol Policies and Education (CAPE) for Low Risk Drinking, 1985.)

Thus CAPE is not, repeat not, associated with prohibitions or notions of stamping out the demon alcohol. It is an awareness programme to provide those who drink with some guidelines on when and where drinking involves risk to you and others. These guidelines you may choose to ignore, or overstep from time

In September of 1966 the Laurentian Voyageurs football team had just entered the Ontario Inter-Collegiate Football Conference. The team's first two games of the new season were part of the Frosh week festivities, with an intersquad game and one against Waterloo Lutheran. Unfortunately, due to the fact that Lambda was only published bi-monthly, sports scores were not carried.

10 Years Ago September 13, 1976

Lambda carried the news that a special senate committee had recommended that Laurentian University reinstate the course evaluation questionnaire discontinued two years earlier. A committee on instructional development was to be created to help professors to use the results to improve their teaching skills.

A dinner was held on Saturday, August 16th Kuala Lumpur, the capital of Malaysia, for Laurentian University graduates from that country. The students came from as far away as the State of Sabah in the South and Penang in the North. They presented Dr. and Mrs. Daniel with an engraved Malaysian Pewter Plate to commemorate the occasion. The reunion of students, many of whom had not seen each other since graduation, was a great success.

LAURENTIAN UNIVERSITY STUDENT DIRECTORY

The Students' General Association with the assistance of the office of the Registrar will be producing a student directory for your use. If you have changed your address or telephone number since registration and have not recorded this change, the directory will have you incorrectly listed. We, therefore, request that you record these changes. Changes may be made at the registrar's office. This will also give you an opportunity to add a local phone number if you wish to do so prior to October 7, 1986. The Directory WILL ONLY BE AS ACCURATE AS THE INFORMATION YOU GIVE US.

ATTENTION ALL STUDENTS

It is advisable to cover yourself, and ensure that you are registered in all the proper courses. To achieve this, one should immediately visit the tenth floor of the Library Tower and ask the Registrar, Jack Porter, if indeed all things are in order. Failure to do so could result in the loss of your time, money, and effort. Jack would probably love to see you, so make sure you wish him your best. Take no chances, 'cause contrary to popular opinion, Laurentian's motto, Emite Lucem et Veritatem, actually means Forget it buddy, I'm the Registrar!

Funding: How The Pot is Hidden

By Michelle Lalonde
Canadian University Press

TORONTO (CUP) — Funding for colleges and universities is dwindling across the country, but the Ontario government is the most subtle about funding cuts, say educational and student groups.

Tony Macerollo, chair of the Canadian Federation of Students, say the Ontario government is "dismantling post-secondary education piece by piece — it is just not as blatant as the B.C. government." The Social Credit government dropped all student aid grants two years ago, and has frozen or cut provincial contributions for three years.

In Ontario, cuts are coming through the back door, Macerollo said. Several schools have introduced new administrative fees that sidestep the government's ban on incidental fees. Ryerson Polytechnical Institute in Toronto, for example, recently introduced a $30 penalty for students who choose to pay their fees in installments.

A 35 per cent increase in the controversial computer fee at the University of Waterloo this summer prompted the Liberal government to ban incidental fees, but allow universities to annually raise the cost of tuition by five per cent.

"The administrations will keep coming up with these neat little ways to get around the tuition ceiling," said Barry Hayward, president of the Ryerson student council, "until the government begins to provide adequate funding."

While Ontario has a problem with incidental fees, Macerollo says students in other provinces face stiff problems.

Newfoundland students weathered a 30 per cent-plus unemployment rate this summer, restricting access to post-secondary education. In Nova Scotia, students pay the highest fees in the country with a base charge of $1500.

Tuition fees in Quebec may triple next year as the government reconsiders the fee freeze students have enjoyed for 17 years.

"All in the name of budget cuts. We have to start looking at post-secondary education as an investment, not a cost," said Macerollo, who served last year as student council president at Carleton University in Ottawa.

Ontario ranks next to Nova Scotia as the province with the lowest proportion of its annual budget spent on post-secondary education. Alberta ranks highest.

In a new brief, the Council of Ontario Universities says costs at Ontario universities have increased by 94 per cent since 1977, while the government has in the same period increased grants by only 68 per cent.

The cost of replacing depreciating equipment in Ontario has been estimated at $89 million per year, while in 1984-85, only $53 million could be found for new equipment.

"The longer the delay in addressing this issue, the greater the problems will be, and the larger the cost of replacing them," says the Council brief.

Many of the Liberal government's education problems may be inherited from the Conservative government that ruled Ontario for more than four decades. Since 1977, enrolment in Ontario's colleges and universities has jumped by 20 per cent. "None of this enrolment growth was recognized by the previous government," the brief claims.

"This has adversely affected instruction. Faculty-student ratios have deteriorated. There is less faculty and student contact, more large classes, [and] fewer written assignments."

Although no significant enrolment change is anticipated for the rest of the decade, the brief warns the system is not prepared to handle a possible enrollment bulge should the province drop Grade 13.

Compliance with Ontario Health and Safety Act and the removal of university exemption from provincial sales tax have also predict budget problems with the possible elimination of mandatory retirement and the implementation of equal pay for work of equal value legislation.

The COU, the Ontario Confederation of University Faculty Associations and the Ontario Federation of Students discussed at a recent meeting options for joint lobbying for more funding from the provincial government.

"The three organizations agree that an increased base operating grant is a common goal, but no specific lobbying strategy has been set," said the COU's William Sayer.

Funding Factors

impact on university costs. An obvious example is the 125% increase in the cost of statutory benefits over the period 1977/78 to 1984/85. Another is the removal of provincial sales tax exemption for university teaching supplies and equipment in 1982.

New or expanded activities

Included in this category are year over year changes in the volume and nature of university activities.

Enrolment growth. This factor has had a very significant impact in the recent past. Since 1977/78, full time equivalent enrolment at Ontario universities has increased by about 20%.

It is fair to say, however, that none of this enrolment growth was recognized financially by the previous government. This has adversely affected instruction. Faculty-student ratios have deteriorated. There is less faculty and student contact; there are more large classes, fewer opportunities for hands-on laboratory experience, fewer written assignments, etc.

Research. The increased volume of university research activity will continue to create problems for university operating budgets. Between 1977/78 and 1984/85, research expenditure at Ontario universities grew by 162% to $328 million. Research as a proportion of combined operating and research expenditure grew from 12.7% to 17.5%, reflecting the costs of providing the necessary additional equipment and supplies, including computer time, and technical support staff. For this essential work to continue, much more consideration must be given to research.

New initiatives. A further factor which needs to be addressed in determining university financial requirements for a given year is the nature and scope of specific new initiatives which universities are periodically challenged to undertake. The amount required to fund such initiatives in a particular year if, indeed, they can be undertaken at all, will depend on the general financial health of the system.

A poor prospect

Annual increases in university operating budgets must be provided for if they are not to fall further behind. Meeting these requirements does not compensate for deficiencies built up over a long period of underfunding. If one remembers that annual universities grant increases averaged less than inflation during the period 1977/78 and 1984/85, some sense of the size of the underfunding gap to be closed may be obtained. As a result, their ability to respond of not largely eliminated.

The Government is calling for excellence. But excellence cannot be built on a weak base. A major influx of monies is needed to fill the gap of a history of underfunding, and to allow the universities of Ontario to achieve the excellence they have been challenged to attain.

The Student Movement?

While going over a few back issues of Lambda with some friends we discovered the headline, This University Belongs to the Students! Dig it! (November 15, 1968). The sight of this intrigued me so much that it is on the back page of this week's issue.

More than this, it got me thinking. At times, I yearn for the activism and excitement of the students of the sixties. Yet, this week when I was presented with a radical article from one of the Lambda writers, attacking the Department of National Defence and its plan to construct a NATO base in Labrador, I refused to print it. The article was heavily slanted and failed to present both sides of a complex situation. Put simply, I could not compromise my thoughts and allow this type of story in the newspaper of which I am the editor.

Unlike my impression of the students of the sixties, the activists I see today often anger me. They jump up just for the right issue, to look as enlightened and liberal as possible. These people consistently warp the facts and mislead opinion. They are dogooders who just want to look good doing it. Radicalism, yes, but not at any cost. It is more important to have a professional, well thought out stand.

It is my hope that a new activism can be created among the students of our generation. An activism based more on equality, justice and freedom and less on image and opportunism. I am reminded of a line from a Bob Dylan song: "In a soldier's stance I aimed my gun at the mongrel dogs who teach... But I was so much older then, I'm younger then that now." That about says it all.

by Jenifer Rush
Assistant Editor in Charge of Executions

We hope you have been satisfied with these first few issues of this year's Lambda. We welcome your contributions, as a matter of fact we lust after them. There are, however as always, a few simple guidelines to be followed.

The deadline for submissions is Friday at noon. Friday — that's the day after Pub night. There are few exceptions to this rule. You see, once we get your copy, we have to typeset it, and we need quite a bit of time to do this. Last Sunday we spent 18 hours putting the paper together, partially because we ended up typesetting late articles on Sunday.

Sundays are, in theory, reserved for "paste up" not "type up". Secondly and equally important is that we'd like copy to be legible. Last Sunday we spent twenty minutes arguing over a word in someone's story, and in the end none of us were correct about it. We'd love you to type everything, but since I rarely type my copy I can hardly expect you to type yours. Double spacing is nice, too.

Hopefully I have not turned any of you against Lambda. We do need your help, after all it is your student newspaper. Drop by Lambda anytime, or track down Ted or myself. Our staff meetings are Fridays at 4:00, and anyone interested may attend.

Letters to The Editor

Re: Feature How to Survive at L.U.

Dear Sir:

It seems to me that Barry Schmidl — our resident professional student — has one major hang-up. I think that he fails to realize the logistical problems involved in bending the rules for Jack or Jill Student. You can't set individual regulations for everybody; it becomes much too subjectively chaotic!

Obviously, Schmidl is confusing his own personal crusade against the Laurentian Administration with some sort of social duty that he feels he must perform.

It sounds to me like Schmidl is into that "self-aggrandizement" thing himself. Perhaps he feels this way because, ever since he lost the SGA presidential election a couple of years ago, he's become no more important than I.

Schmidl has a bad attitude and we're all tired of his over-dramatic criticism.

Sincerely, David A Baker

Editor's Note: While I personally do not agree with Barry on many issues we discuss, I have always found his work for Lambda to be professional, and his dedication to student interests, exceptional.

Re: Editorial Castrating God and other fun stuff (Sept. 8)

Dear Mr Markle,

I am submitting the following as a "Letter to the Editor" in response to your editorial in the first issue of Lambda.

Two noted researchers on human communication, Gail and Michele Meyers, suggest that we remember only about 50% of what we've heard one hour after we've heard it, less than 25% one week after, and less than 10% two weeks after. Your editorial outlining your observations of the United Church's General Council, published a little over two weeks after the end of this event, supports the Meyers' findings.

To put it bluntly, your editorial contains a great deal of misinformation, and worse, it omits most of the significant accomplishments of General Council.

You report that the General Council de-sexed God and pronounced that its membership now had to address God as both Father and Mother, Lord and Lady. In fact, the General Council only passed a resolution suggesting that its members should feel free to address God with masculine or feminine or gender-free terms (such as "Our Parent").

CAPE at Laurentian

to time; the purpose of the programme is to make you aware of the risks so that your decision is reasonably informed.

Laurentian and CAPE

Last year a CAPE Committee was established at Laurentian under my Chairmanship. Two subcommittees were formed; one on education and the other to consider policies. Both committees included staff, students and faculty.

The education committee initiated a number of activities and made preparations for the implementation of the programme in 1986. The policies committee developed a set of draft policies for discussion by the university community.

Since these were only completed towards the end of the year, the discussion did not take place, and they will be recirculated this Fall for consideration. Student organizations and councils will receive the draft documents.

Both aspects of the CAPE programme are important. The education programme is meant to provide information and to promote moderation and informed attitudes to drinking.

The development of policies is equally important, first because comprehensive policies do not exist at Laurentian and, second, because the University, as an institution where alcohol is served, requires policies in order to meet its legal and social responsibilities.

Let me stress that any final policy document will emerge only after extensive discussion. A policy that is unacceptable to a large section of the university community is doomed to failure.

Objections raised

The CAPE material is unduly authoritarian.

My impression on reading through "Appropriativity" is that the summaries at the end of each section are categorical. But they are summaries of what preceded, and they are only intended to be guidelines. The rest is up to you.

CAPE is run by Administration.

Untrue, CAPE was originally proposed by the President and I was asked to undertake the early organization of the programme. Students have been invited and involved at every phase and their contribution has been essential. In the future I hope to see equal representation of students and faculty/administration.

CAPE has proposed raising the drinking age

Also untrue. CAPE is a programme which has been adopted by various universities. ARF, which developed CAPE, may have made such a statement, but this I have not been able to confirm. If, however, it was made, such a statement does not entail endorsement by Laurentian. The CAPE Committee at Laurentian has not discussed the question, and I am personally not in favour of raising the drinking age.

CAPE and you

Over the next months you will be hearing from CAPE, whether by posters, workshops, or other forms of dissemination of information.

Paddy Blenkinsop

You will also be able to join in the discussion of the policy document through the student associations and councils.

I invite you to look, listen and express your opinions. Take part in the discussions so that we can develop attitudes and policies that are both sensible and acceptable.

You report that the General Council proposed a Peace Tax for Canadians. This would involve our being able to choose whether some of our federal tax money should be spent on military hardware. A naive idea perhaps. But what you failed to report was that this suggestion emerged out of a much larger debate about the proliferation of nuclear armaments and the stalemate in peace talks between the super powers.

Your sins of omission, however, far outweigh your sins of commission. May I list some of these.

You failed to mention the moving apology of the General Council to Canada's Native peoples for centuries of abuse and exploitation.

You failed to report that over 40 hours of the General Council's time was taken up with intense discussion of unemployment as well as the development of strategies to provide employment particularly for Canada's youth.

You failed to record that the United Church elected a lay woman as its new head, or Moderator.

You failed to relate to your readers that this General Council allowed a representative group of young people and children to participate fully in the deliberations and celebrations.

I could go on.

Should one term the meeting of General Council of the United Church "two weeks of grandstand political jokes", or would it be more accurate to suggest it was two weeks of vigorous, grassroots, prophetic politics? Bashing liberals and liberation movements is trendy these days, isn't it Mr Markle, and easy too. But you do seem to like to play games. So could I suggest that you might try a tougher game. Why not attack some of these secure, smug, Big "C" organizations which are so abusive towards people these days? You might find this game a little more competitive, and enlightening as well.

Professor Brian Aitken,
Huntington College

Editor's Note: Professor Aitken, you are too nice a guy to be in the United Church. Sovereignty lies with God and our elected Parliament. The "Peace Tax" is, simply, naive endorsement of anarchy. The apology to the Natives was a chintzy stage-managed charade. Youth employment? As one, I can assure you that anyone who really wants work can find it. All people, no matter their age are worth the amount of sweat off their brow. Female Moderator? Come on now, who cares what sex a moderator or anyone else is? To prove your point you should have made Boy George your moderator.

Don't go on.

It seems to me that God, he or she, will have to play his/her games at Huntington.

Dear Ted:

I read with much amusement the whining, self-congratulatory mea culpa from the President of "THE ENGINEERS".

I can still see him wiping the stigmatic blood from his hands as he strides from his imaginary cross!

His illiterate epistle was an insincere apology on behalf of an engineering student who had interrupted my class. However, if members of his organization were capable of communicating with each other as well as showing some common courtesy, no problem would have arisen.

Steve Goff, a really nice guy.

To set the record straight, on September 10th, two thoughtful and polite engineering students asked me to announce their initiation meeting to my class and to allow any first-year engineers to attend this meeting, which was scheduled at the same time. I agreed wholeheartedly and made the announcements. As it turned out, the only first-year engineers in my class had already gone to the meeting. All well and good so far.

So imagine my chagrin when, halfway through my lecture, I was cut off in mid-sentence by a rude engineering student who burst into my class and began shouting an announcement before even receiving a word from me. I told him stridently that I had already given the same information at the beginning of class.

If he were announcing an important event, such as the building being on fire, I could understand his importunate manner. However, I must take some of the blame for failing to realize this man's burning need to ejaculate unnecessary and out-of-date news, regardless of courtesy. Similarly, I had not realized that the Gods would hurl fire and brimstone and that ULU would tumble into Ramsey Lake if the tribal rituals of engineering were not practised in punctilious fashion, according to canon and that my humble teaching efforts were construed as possibly undermining the sacred liturgy of the Mechanic's Priesthood! (And lo, there was weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth!)

In my profound ignorance, I did not know that the rules of "proper school conduct" were in abeyance, and was surprised to learn that this also included politeness and courtesy. I am also guilty of failing to recognize that engineers are a superior life-form with superior rights; I had assumed that their freedom ended where my nose began. However, I am now aware that while most engineering students are considerate people, there are a few remarkable individuals who appear capable of bipedal locomotion and verbal articulation without the need of a single intercranial neuron — surely an outstanding feat for biomechanical engineering!

Incidentally, I asked for no public letter of apology. When I forcedly mentioned this incident to one of the polite engineers who has seen me before class, he offered to arrange an apology which I assumed would be a private letter. However, Mr Bullock's bumptious public display shows that the skills of social interaction possessed by some of "THE ENGINEERS" need a little polishing — possibly sandblasting. His apology, albeit reluctant, is gratefully accepted.

Sincerely, Dr Steve Goff

An Open Letter from Ben Farella, SGA president

On behalf of the executive of the SGA, I would like to congratulate you, the students, for making our opening social events a great success. It was your involvement and active participation that made them the spectacle they turned out to be. Keep it up!

As well, I would like to thank Lise Lamotte and the AEF for donating their office space, thus making it possible to provide the performers with a high level of hospitality. Your cooperation was essential, and we look forward to working together with you in the future. All the best in the upcoming year.

Fédération Canadienne des Etudiant(e)s

The Canadian Federation of Students is the national students' organization for post-secondary students in Canada. The Ontario Federation of Students is affiliated with CFS/FCE. The CFS/FCE represents students across Canada and works on national issues such as Canada Student Loans, federal education funding transfers to the provinces and student employment through its lobby efforts in Ottawa.

The CFS/FCE and its predecessor, the National Union of Students, have won victories over the years such as increases in the Canada Student Loan Plan and summer employment programmes. As well as maintaining close contact with the governing and opposition parties at the national level, CFS/FCE member associations also lobby Members of Parliament in their ridings; they prepare a number of research papers each year on various student related topics; and they also provide fieldworkers to help member campuses with organizing efforts. In Ontario, the latter is done through OFS/FEO.

In addition to its political wing, CFS/FCE has a services component. Among the services it offers are:

- Travel Cuts, a student travel agency with discount prices in Canada and around the world. It has over a dozen locations across Canada and one office is located in Northern Ontario (here at Laurentian University).
- The Student Work Abroad Programme (SWAP) offers working holidays for CFS/FCE student members in Europe, New Zealand, and Australia.
- The Studentsaver Discount Card, a national discount programme, covers over 10,000 outlets.
- The International Student Identity Card (ISIC), provides discounts around the world on food accommodation, travel, etc. (this card is free for CFS/FCE members).
- The Information Resource Service (IRS), provides research documents for members.
- The National Student Council Directory offers information on student associations across Canada (a larger version of the Northern Students' Commission's Northern Student Council Directory).
- The Canadian Programming Service (CPS), a speakers bureau with a wide range of speakers on many topics.

Students must pass a referendum at their institutions to become full members of CFS/FCE. The membership fees, collected with the rest of students' tuition fees, amount to $4.00 per year.

OFS/FEO

Ontario Federation of Students
Fédération des Etudiant(e)s de l'Ontario

*Students working together for change.
Etudiant(e)s pour le changement.*

The Ontario Federation of Students represents about 200,000 college and university students. The membership's link to the Federation is through its member student unions. Students are represented in OFS by their Student Council or association. The student association, in particular the VP External, is responsible for letting students know what OFS is doing at the same time as communicating students' concerns to the Federation.

Students vote to become members of OFS in a local referendum. In voting yes, each student agrees to pay $3 to OFS. This fee is collected when tuition fees are paid. It is OFS' only source of revenue. Students remain OFS members until they vote to leave the Federation.

OFS' policy is decided at provincial conferences three times a year. Each Student Council sends delegates who bring up motions and vote on them. Conferences provide an opportunity for students from across Ontario to discuss issues and problems and to develop courses of action for change.

A twelve member executive is elected each year to implement the work decided upon at the conferences. The executive is headed by a full-time Chairperson and meets every month. This body is responsible for the decisions of the Federation between conferences. Two of this year's Executive members are SGA students.

To address the special needs of the different sectors of its constituency, OFS members are divided into five "Commissions":

- The Ontario College Commission groups together the community college members to discuss the transferability of college credits, student representation on Boards of Governors, "free labour", incidental fees and classroom overcrowding.
- The Union of Ontario Undergraduates is a Commission of undergrad university students dealing with issues such as course evaluation, and student representation on Boards of Governors and Senates.
- The Ontario Graduate Association brings together the graduate university students to work on issues such as copyright and research of students, tuition and the Ontario Graduate Scholarship Programme.
- The Ontario Commission of International Students organizes international student groups on the issues of differential fees and other visa student concerns.
- The Northern Students' Commission is formally a Commission of the OFS, and is covered later on in this article.

OFS also has several committees dealing with specific areas. These include the Housing Committee, the Funding Committee and the Student Aid Committee.

The policy of the OFS has been developed by its membership. The main thrust of this policy is that post-secondary education should be universally accessible and should be of high quality. In order that there be no barriers to accessibility, tuition must be reduced, student aid improved, summer jobs created at good rates of pay, and enrollment maintained at a level that meets public demand. OFS wants measures taken to ensure that the traditionally disadvantaged groups participate in post-secondary education. These include students from low income families, women, ethnic minorities, students in the North, francophones and Natives.

A commitment to quality education means that provincial and federal governments must consistently provide adequate funding to the institutions, that teachers and courses must be evaluated and developed, and that there be long-term planning for the entire post-secondary system.

OFS meets regularly with the Minister of Colleges and Universities to lobby and to gather information on government policy. The Federation also makes submissions to other government departments, commissions and advisory bodies. The OFS has often joined forces with other university and college faculty, administration and staff organizations to act in common interest.

In addition to a full-time Chairperson, there are ten staff: an Executive Director, a Communications Director, two Researchers, two Fieldworkers, a Finance Manager, an Administrative Assistant, a Translator and a Printer. These are the people who keep the OFS functioning on a daily basis and who service the membership. The Researchers are responsible for keeping on top of trends in post-secondary education and for providing data and analyses to OFS members. Student Councils regularly use OFS research in their work. The Fieldworkers, one of whom (Carl Héту) is based at Laurentian, maintain regular contact with the membership and help Councils organize students on issues. The Communications Director keeps the major media and campus press informed of student activity and opinion as well as lobbying government officials.

The most important thing that the OFS provides is democratic leadership for Ontario students. Elected student representatives turn student concerns into action. OFS initiates and co-ordinates provincial campaigns to effect changes to government and to institution policy. OFS unites students on many campuses into one growing student movement.

NSC

Northern Students' Commission

Northern Ontario's Colleges and Universities are faced with the problems of a large geographical area, a small population, and an inadequately funded education system. If a student manages to make it to post-secondary education in the first place, and is able to pay her/his way through to a degree or diploma, he/she then faces a bleak employment situation. The Northern Students' Commission exists to confront this situation.

The predecessor of the NSC was founded in 1978, lapsed into disuse for two years, and was effectively reborn as the Northern Students' Committee at a conference of Northern student associations in October 1981 at Algoma University College. In June 1986 the Northern Students' Commission was established in order to provide for a more effective organization as well as to provide for a more equal relationship with the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS). The NSC has continued to grow in effectiveness and ability to the present day.

The objectives of the NSC have been defined as follows:

1. To identify and act upon issues that directly affect Northern students.
2. To help Northern Student Councils develop their skills, structures, organizing abilities and services.
3. To increase the participation of Northern students and their Student Councils in the NSC.
4. To increase the awareness of Northern issues in southern Ontario.
5. To overcome the problems caused by isolation in the North.

Over the past several years, the NSC has been active on many issues. It played a large part in stopping the implementation of the Parrott Report (the proposed amalgamation of the four North-Eastern Universities); it completes a large scale student summer unemployment survey every two years; it has organized annual Northern Ontario Students Conferences to develop the skills of Northern Student Council members; and has organized annual Northern Ontario Social Directors Orientation Conferences to prepare new social directors for their positions.

Any Student Council in Northern Ontario may join the NSC. Membership is automatic for those joining the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS). Any Student Council not wishing to join the OFS, but which wishes to join the NSC, may do so by passing a motion to join and promising to run a referendum within two years to ask their students' permission to join on a long term basis.

Meetings of the NSC are held four times per year at various member campuses. The Commission's Executive consists of a Chairperson, a Vice-Chairperson, a Services Commissioner, and an Information Commissioner who are elected at the Spring NSC meeting. As well, the Commission's Council contains one representative from each member association. Each has one vote at NSC Council meetings no matter how many or how few students it represents. Travel subsidies for delegates from member associations are available. The NSC is funded by occasional government grants, by the Ontario Federation of Students and by NSC-only members' membership fees. It is aided in its pursuits by NSC staff, and the Canadian Federation of Students' support staff. The NSC has an office at Laurentian University, and two of its Executive members this year are SGA students.

Campus Profile

The Usual Problem

"So, if these organizations are so great, why have I never heard of them?" you might ask. Since most students don't pay attention to what their local Student Association is doing, they are also barely aware of what their regional, provincial, and national organizations are doing. Although the three organizations appear in campus and commercial press with some regularity, students don't notice. Anyway, press is not the only form in which these organizations are supposed to be noticed by students.

The local student association is supposed to help publicize the existence of the organizations. The three groups are each the sum of their total memberships and only the local representatives of the students can have the resources to adequately publicize what the organizations are doing. Ten people in an office in Toronto cannot speak at all of the OFS' 200,000 plus members, for example. They cannot even do anything approaching it. The reason that OFS (and NSC and CFS) exist is to work on improving the student situation by working with government and appropriate other groups. If the three groups are not better known by students on campus then the student association (and particularly the VP external) is at fault. This year is not really under way and thus it is not fair to criticize the present incumbent. The previous incumbent of the VP External's position can certainly be faulted for falling down on the job. When a student association's members vote in a referendum to join an organization they must be kept informed (Note: SGA students voted to remain in the OFS and to join the CFS in 1984 by an 89.6% margin. Last winter, AEF students voted to join OFS by a 92% margin).

Men's Cagers

by Greg Lawrence

It was a little more than a year ago when Peter Campbell came to Laurentian to assume his duties as the men's basketball coach and with him he brought one basic ideal: work — hard work — pays dividends. Basically this meant you busted your butt day in and day out on the premise that a better conditioned team can beat a more talented team if they can outrun them for forty minutes. This year, Campbell has already made it apparent that the team will not venture very far from these original ideals.

Training camp began on Monday with first year assistant coach Rod McCue (of Sudbury Secondary Fame) putting the players through their paces. Although coach Campbell was not present, his presence was felt in most of the drills — the ski hill comes to mind.

The team finished with a 10-4 won/lost record and in second place in the Ontario

East last season and is reflecting on both the high and low points of the previous season to prepare for the upcoming one. With a win against Western, who finished third in Canada, a five point loss to undefeated York on their court, and a respectable performance against Estonic of Toronto, a team loaded with Olympic and National team members, The Vees have more than enough reason to look at the upcoming season with confidence.

However, with the good comes the bad, and two regular season upsets at the hands of Ryerson and Carlton as well as a semi-final loss, in double overtime to U of T, a game in which the Vees sealed their own coffin with a lack of poise in the late going must also be looked at when planning the development of this year's team.

Perhaps the team's biggest obstacle last year was themselves. At times they were excellent, playing at a level comparable to the best in the country, and at times they seemed lost, displaying a lack of confidence and a lack of definite leadership both of which are essential if they are to achieve the potential they are obviously capable of.

This season, the team should overcome these problems with the stability of a consistent and excellent coaching staff, the increased experience and court-maturity of the players and the return of all-star Jeff McKibbin to play out his fifth year of eligibility. The Vees are possibly on the verge of one of their best seasons to date.

Another important factor is that of the twelve members of last year's team, eleven are at camp again this year. Coupled with this is quite possibly the best crop of freshmen the team has ever had to work with — a situation that can only benefit the program in the long run.

Last year, the Vees rocked the boat. This year, all things considered, they may very well overturn it.

Manager McGregor, and Coach Zorbas just returned with their soccer squad after a 3 - 0 victory over Trent, and a 1 - 1 tie with Carlton.

Sports Editorial

As sports editor for Lambda this year, there are a number of sports events I could write about. For example, the Toronto Maple Leafs are always a popular or unpopular topic, as are the Dallas Cowboys; but what I want to feature this year is Varsity Sports and Varsity Athletes.

We can always read about professional teams in major papers. If you want to know about Varsity Sports, this is the paper to read — at least that is my goal. To achieve this, I need co-operation on the part of coaches and athletes. Journalists receive a great deal of advice on "what to write about" from coaches and athletes. But at the same time the journalist is expected to know the whos, whats and wheres of any particular varsity sport.

So this is a call to all varsity coaches, if you want coverage, call me at 673-6548.

As a varsity athlete I understand what it means to read about my team in the paper. As insignificant as some people may want to make it, to us it means a great deal!

Varsity athletes, particularly at Laurentian, require a great deal of commitment. Not only as an athlete but, and probably more so, as a student. Laurentian varsity students must travel more kilometers than any other varsity team in Ontario. Trying to catch up on homework in a hotel room in Kingston requires a great deal of discipline. Especially when you are there during Purino Homecoming week!

Laurentian varsity athletes are consistently forced to play under unfavourable circumstances. The travel load has often an exhausting effect on the athletes. What students and professors must realize is that we, as a team, do not play for ourselves but for Laurentian University!

Whether a team member is here because it was the only university to accept him/her is irrelevant. Once an individual is part of a varsity team that then becomes a source of strength, camaraderie and friendship. This makes us play harder, better and, in the end, for our university!

John Walsh
Sports Editor

Corrections from last week's table of Laurentian Varsity Sports accomplishments:

From 1963-71, read "Men's Hockey", not "Men's Basketball".

From 1984-85, read "Women's Basketball OIAA Finals", not "CIAU Finals".

Varsity Swimming

by Mike Chmara and Darcy Wallingford

We know everyone at the University follows this sport almost as closely as the NHL, so it goes without saying that every Laurentian student knows who the stars are that make up this team.

Perhaps the best known person on the team — one or two of you might have heard of him — is Sasa Baumann. (This is Alex's nickname not his sister's, as some might think.) It could be said that Sasa is one of the better swimmers on the team who is currently resting up Down Under after a fun-filled trip to the Commonwealth Games and world championships. Let's just hope he gets back here in time to compete at the OUAAs.

The other Vees swimmer who competed in Europe over the summer was breaststroke specialist Darcy Wallingford. These two are definite gold medal possibilities at CIAUs.

Other swimmers, although not as well known, have a big part in making this year's team the best ever. Steve Russell, or as he's known on the team, the "Peruvian Flake", is an athlete who has nowhere to go but up. He's one swimmer who works hard just getting to a workout.

Another member of the

team, Johnny "La rue" Rousell, is making a comeback after three years of not even setting a foot on the pool deck. Johnny keeps us laughing with his unintentionally hilarious antics.

The final member on the men's team, the veteran, Mike Chamara, could be referred to as the "Comeback Kid". Due to Mike's remarkably bad luck and lack of timing, he is making his third return to the sport. Who knows what he'll break this year — hopefully a record.

This year we have the largest women's team in two years. Consisting of one swimmer, Cynthia MacPherson from Aurora, Ontario — and the only person on the team who's not from Sudbury — is hoping not to be the only girl. There's got to be a few other girls out there who feel at least a little bit of compassion for this unfortunate girl who has to put up with these remarkably good-natured young gentlemen.

Watching over all these fine-tuned, lean, mean swimming machines is the master of outrageousness himself — Dr. Jen Tihanyi — whose bite is worse than his bark. He trains us all to swim as fast as we can when performance counts, and he has extensive experience in this field.

Even though this is one of the largest contingents ever, with a whopping six members, more would be more welcome. No tryouts are needed — surviving the workouts is enough. For more information, talk to any of the members, or get in touch with Dr. Tihanyi at the Phys. Ed building.

P.S. There are free trips involved.

SPORTS SHORTS

It's a bronze for Canada

■ MOSCOW: Canada's women basketball players, led by Bev Smith and Carol Hamilton, took the bronze medal in the world championship here with a 64-59 (halftime 33-21) victory over Czechoslovakia.

Canada owed their success mainly to Bev, who added 19 points to the 28 she scored against the Soviet Union team last Tuesday, and Carol, who scored 12.

In the playoff for seventh placing, Bulgaria beat Hungary 79-75 (35-33) while Brazil crushed Taiwan 92-67 (33-28) in the playoff for 11th place. — Reuter.

Not Much Meat, But Lots of Bite

by Geoff MacQueen

Why do some people read horror novels? This is a question that I have never been able to answer to my own satisfaction, in spite of being one of the group that do. Something seems to exist inside, that makes us seek out the darkness within us. Maybe we think that if we go into the darkness far enough, we will find the light at the end.

The Light At The End is a novel by John Skipp and Craig Spector that, while not a masterpiece, does try hard, and is worth a reading if you are into horror. If you are not, it should be avoided like... you know the cliché.

The novel moves rapidly, going from violence to violence, and building electrically. More than fear is generated, however. This novel is fun. Enough major characters populate the story that, if we must face our fears, we need not face them alone.

This aspect does have some problems for a horror novel, because company tends to put a damper on fear.

Also, I found that some of the graphic violence distracts from the internal suspense that is inherent in the situations in the novel.

Much of the killing is imaginatively written, however, and to some degree this justifies the overkill.

In other areas as well, the writing is textured. The style is quirky, often clever, and always distinctive. It manages to find a happy medium of being unusual, and yet not distracting from the plot itself. Notably absent is the duality of style found in most collaborative literature. This is presumably because, as the bio says, the authors "Have been working together, off and on, for more than a dozen years."

The setting for the novel is New York. This is not the New York of most literature, but the New York of cult cinemas, of punks, and of hippies left over from the sixties. It is a city where anything is possible. This is only the sunlit side of the city, however, and the novel shows the literal underbelly, the New York Subway System. This dark network of tunnels running like veins beneath the city is the perfect home for... you'll find out if you read the novel.

The story also explores the nature of evil. At the heart of the evil, the centre of the darkness, is the proverbial "light at the end of the tunnel."

The real success of the story is that it does not quite fit into the accepted patterns. The opening is typical terror tale, but after that, it fakes the reader out, moves where stories don't normally go, and generally pulls a few good surprises.

For all its faults, this novel is good entertainment. It provides action, some solid shocks, and enough twists to hold the above average reader's interest. (There are no average readers, only above and below.) In short, it's good fun for the strong of stomach.

ONE CRAZY SUMMER

by Ingrid

Picture this: Graduation; first love; geek beats jock; and a star is born. What do you have? Pretty in Pink? Sixteen Candles? Teen Wolf? No, just Warner Brother's latest end-of-summer movie.

Old teen-fantasy regulars Demi Moore and John Cusack team up with the newer, refreshing (!) talent of Bobcat Goldthait, resulting in this cliché-crammed hour and a half flick.

If at times the vulgarity of the overdrawn puns becomes tedious, the sheer hilarity of the characters' situations and their cartoon counterparts keep the audience roaring. This strangely-scary rendition of boy-meets-girl-on-summer-vacation holds no surprise endings or unexpected originality.

For senseless, meaningless fun, this flick does the job well. The characters are predictably two-dimensional and unreal, but they do capture the audience's attention long enough to grab a few laughs.

As a farewell to the days of sunshine, however, One Crazy Summer should not be missed — if for laughs alone.

* Note of Caution: Whatever you do, don't laugh at the dog

REM: Life's Rich Pageant

IRS Records

by Carl Jorgensen

If you have ever heard REM before you will have heard a guitar, a bass, some drums, a banjo, an accordion, some horns, and this guy signing through the collar of his turtleneck. Their fourth album is different. They hired John Cougar Mellencamp's producer and he brought the vocals of Michael Stipe to the front.

Now we can understand his singing...but we still have trouble comprehending what it is he is saying. There are hints of romance, faith, and other general themes in the lyrics, and unlike the previous album, Fables of the Reconstruction, there seems to be a focus for all the musings.

REM hail from Athens, Georgia. I've never seen it, but rumour has it that there is a rockband factory in this little town. So far Athens has given us the B-52s, Pylon, and REM, just to name three.

The band is made up of Mike Mills, Bill Berry, Peter Buck, and Stipe, all of whom still live in Athens when not touring. They have to date given us 4 albums and an EP worth note.

The debut EP Chronic Town yielded the infectious "Radio Free Europe" and through LPs Murmur, Reckoning and Fables of the Reconstruction, they have remained in the forefront of the college radio scene, and the apple of the well-listened critic's ear.

The brighter sound quality of the album makes it come across as less of a "cowpunk" album (shit, I hate that word) than Fables, and overall the tone is more progressive and powerful, even the tango-tangled "Underneath the Bunker", has an edge to it... sort of.

The musical style is hard to describe. Try this one: Georgia-bred-country-influenced, Bruce-Springsteen-this-is - real - music - from - a - real-hometown, jangly-rock-guitar - flavoured - the - 60s - are - back punk. Even to include punk in there is almost wrong if it were not for the non-sense, straightforward attitudes of the band members.

I'll rate it a 4. Whether that's out of 5 or out of 10 is up to you.

If you like the styles/sounds of REM check out the new albums by 54°40 and Guadalcanal Diary.

Dear Pierre

Dear Pierre,

I teach Classics. In one of my classes, a certain soccer player lay down on the floor, and the Editor of Lambda stole the sports section from my Toronto Star. Furthermore, my boss informs me that I am the only one in my department. What should I do?

Lonely on the Sidelines

Dear Lonely,

Visit Ottawa ASAP! Failing that, talk it over with Dr. John Daniel. His workers lie down on the job, and his Deans have lost their faculties, so he could at least lend an apathetic ear.

Dear Pierre,

I fell asleep in English class last week and proceeded to have the most vivid, erotic and downright pleasant dream of my life. There I was walking on the clouds over the Land of Oz when suddenly, coming towards me were Dorothy and Toto.

This was no normal Dorothy — this gal was a real fox with a long see-through white sheet wrapped around the most impressive figure I had ever seen. I ran towards her and pulled her beautiful body against mine.

Suddenly my professor slammed a ruler across my knuckles and ruined my fantasy. The shocking outline of my professor's face glaring down at me has stayed in my memory ever since.

Is there no Justice?

Dear Justice,

You have chosen the wrong class to do your sexual fantasizing in. Try Biology, it might be a little more accepted (maybe even appreciated).

Dear Pierre,

I have been up here for three weeks now, and I have yet to have a solid sit down on the John. What's going on?

Dear Wild,

It is unclear from your letter whether you are referring to the multi-limbed members of

Tales Of High Adventure And Low Living

One thing about high adventure is the way some people try to screw you around. Even if you just want to see your friends and relax on this campus a person is supposed to stand in line to do this. Particularly on Thursday night.

Did you know that the SGA, who represents most of the students at Laurentian, runs the Pub? Did you know that many of the people that are ahead of you in line don't even attend Laurentian? And how about those other students that pay the same SGA fees as you? You know, the ones that security let in ahead of you because they are friends.

I was in line last Thursday and three people from the end of the line were let in before those who had stood in line for the better part of an hour.

What's the use of having a line? To be really fair about it, it should be a single-file line. You know what that is?

Grade-schoolers do it all the time. I suppose it would be too demanding on the organizational skills of security. I'm sure you know security. They're the ones with the big yellow stripes.

A lady in the line told me that in East Germany, people wait in line to go to discos and that the communists with their bad reputation and all don't let people in until it is their turn. What a concept!

I guess mishandling responsibility at the door gives some people a feeling of power. By some people I mean our friends with the big yellow stripes. It seems they have forgotten who pays their wages. Let's all try and remind them. Ad infinitum.

And let's remind them that they are enforcing a fire code. That's a hell of a thing to turn into a popularity contest.

You and I will have our high adventures no matter what, but let's leave the low living to security.

News from the U's

OTTAWA — The University of Alberta's student newspaper has swung into a new year of publication, but has no formal guarantee of legal protection from its publisher.

The student union said in July it could not find an insurance company willing to cover the 76-year-old Gateway, thus making the editorial board and the paper's contributors legally responsible if the paper were sued.

Vice-president Tim Boston said insurance companies feel "universities are a bad risk" and "its students are all kids in their eyes."

The student union currently pays $7,500 to $5,000 more than last year for $3 million in insurance coverage.

Although the Gateway has been threatened with lawsuits in the past, the paper has not been sued successfully.

VICTORIA — The student council president has been forced to resign because she is not eligible to register for classes this fall.

Monica Maier, elected to the one-year position last March, "is Constitutionally obliged to resign", according to student council general manager David Clode. Her letter of resignation will take effect the end of September.

Maier, whose academic probation was waived to allow her to run for the position, learned in May she would not be able to register. The council agreed to support Maier until September should a development arise, although some councillors say she should have resigned last spring.

A by-election has been scheduled for later this month.

MONTREAL — A Concordia student is taking the university to court over an infamous "academic materials fee" saying it was not part of the contract she signed when she registered.

Bettina Rosenberg, a second-year Women's Studies student, said she plans to file suit and win with the help of the students' council, who will absorb her legal fees.

As a member of the council's board of directors, she says the fee of $3.5 per credit is just the university's way of raising money for its expected deficit of $9.5 million, a claim the university officials flatly deny.

Lucie Beauchemin, a Concordia official, is convinced the university did everything in its power to inform students about the fee. Presently the university is taking a "wait and see attitude" until the case is decided in court.

Thorneloe Thunder

Well another year is upon us all, and all this bird would like to say is "Welcome Back Thunderbirds", and to the Frosh "Respect your Seniors."

I'd like to talk about this past Frosh week. Most of the old and almost all the new T-Birds were flying in dozed states every night.

Now let's talk about the Frosh. Here at Thorneloe we have again been blessed with a bunch angels and guys.

First off is Andrew who was the first Frosh in, and proved himself as a good sport and a great T-Bird. Andrew, say hi to mom next time you talk to her. Geof is our resident philosopher, what he believes is anyone's guess. Wally likes females thank goodness, but do you have to include farm animals? Mark is not heaven-sent he just seems like it. Dave R. is tall and drinks and dances like a duck.

Steve is a black belt so he's a nice guy. Susan is shy but will change. Kathy B., well whatever. Marie is French, so strike one. Sheila, Jim and Tim are tall. Rena is short. Renée is living here and she's not sure why she wants six screws for a shelf unit. Nora likes her B-52s. I thought socks were for your feet Nor. Sylvia is a real party animal. Katherine M., or Mrs. to everyone else but Ted, is one sweet lady. Kathy R. says that this week has been amazing. Hey Hoss, who's lassie? Sam is missing a cylinder, so I'm told. Why does Mary-Jo snort?

Now for old news, which is new TNT is still banging around. And CD is still playing and so is the other CD player.

Congratulations to Todd and Bert on their engagement. If you're confused over that, don't worry about it.

Congratulations to Hoss, this years Century Club champ. Johnny Athens is recovering from testicleitis. (it sure isn't from overuse!)

That's it for now, there will be more gossip as soon as this bird sobers up.

Welcome, T-BIRDS! THIS YEAR WILL BE AMAZING!

Well, well, well! Another banner year begins at UC. Congrats to those fortunate few who were granted the privilege of returning to this great institution.

For all Frosh, I was left with a message to give to you from the "10" and it states, "You are Frosh for a year, not a week, so be careful." Speaking of Frosh, there is just a bumper crop this year. During our annual Frosh week, a pair of Frosh stood out above the rest. Sophie E. was female Frosh of the year. Kenny S. was male Frosh of the year. There were also a few other mentionables: Trevor got the tree while his friends Mark B. and Tim F. got the painful pencil, right fellas?

Enough about the trivial stories, let's get into some juicy scoops. Last week was the annual coed slowpitch tourney and the foul balls won — congrats people. It seems the intense level of play was even more intense during post play celebrations. Storm couldn't get enough action on the field, so he decided to play a little "Billy"ball, but that game was called because of darkness. Trevor got Steve's hockey season started rather early this year. Poor Steve got the hockey bags on Saturday night.

Paul K. from SSR came to UC and met super hoover Colleen on his way up. Keep the turtle neck on for another few days, Paul!

Well, with so many scoops and so little room, what we are going to do is play a little game — match the scooper to the scoopee and you can be our lucky grand prize winner. Remember, any single scooper can match with more than one scoopee and vice versa, so use your imagination. Scoopers: Snuckums, Mark B., Ian T., Mike B., Rail, BT, Shorty, Marv, Steve, Eve, Joel. Now the scoopees: Nicole, Pikester, Monique, VJ, Patti, Wendy, Shavan, Julie, Karen, Kammie, Diane C., and Gail. Well, until next week, keep scooping!

Good night Cheechoo!

MONTREAL — McGill University recently acquired stock in companies with South African interests despite a vote a year ago to divest.

Guy Thompson, coordinator of the McGill South Africa committee, said the complications arose because the university's investment committee did not receive a definitive list of corporations from which to divest until April.

McGill's South African investments have decreased only about 20 per cent. The university has 1,200 shares in Seagram's, 4,500 shares of IBM and 30,000 shares in Noranda.

VANCOUVER — Students who think they are living in poverty may be kidding themselves, and should try living on a real poverty budget, says a recent report.

The Federated Anti-Poverty Coalition suggests students fast for two days and plan a monthly budget based on the earnings of the average welfare recipient.

Many university students, says Vancouver school trustee Phil Rankin, come from well-to-do families and are only familiar with the short-term poverty of student life.
